From Principal to Parent

June 1, 1933.

Dear Parents:

Success, according to a large part of our pre-depression Americans, has been interpreted as the accomplishment of a purpose by hook or crook, by fair means or foul. Fortunately for the country, we have at its head a President whose being is founded upon the ideals of conduct, of character, and of social sacrifice and not upon the ingrained thought of getting away with things unnoticed by others. The example of carrying on the affairs of state sincerely, openly, and above-board must prompt all of us, the parent, the child, and the educator to fix in our characters the cardinal principle, "Success comes to all by helping man and child to recognize the justice of loyalty to country and the joy of self-sacrifice for our fellow-men."

Very truly yours,

William Weier
Principal.

Shuffle the Cards!

Each day the great mechanism that is our government acts as a robot which mechanically deals out new cards. The aces, jacks, twos, and fours miraculously change before our eyes to beer bills, unemployment solutions, farm relief, et al.

A smaller robot, but one quite powerful in its scope of high school life, is now engaged in rousing us from a lethargy that has encompassed us for the past few years. Perhaps it was one of the whims of capricious old Demon Depression that publicized our Alma Mater as lacking in school spirit, as being just a machine that turned out students from its hopper in one indistinguishable pattern, and as a group in whose minds the lunchroom, where gayety and hilarity reign, came first and the "halls of learning" just a poor third or fourth.

With this new deal of unused, immaculate cards, there will be noticed, even now, a change in the attitudes of our students. Activities are once more taking on the aspect of a project that will attain its full growth in the very near future. Our sports squads show great promise. The Rooseveltian influence, the New Deal, has taken a hand in the proceedings!

MIRIAM STERNBERGER.

Confessions and Contritions

Another June has come. Time for one more class to depart. But has our dear old Alma Mater allowed us to leave her loving grasp without some token of affection? Ah, no! Though we sorrowfully take our leave, she bestows upon each and every one of us two of the most valuable gifts, wisdom and memories.

We came to her a flock of foolish, giggling youngsters. We thought her mean when she allowed those dignified creatures (namely seniors) to look down on us with amused, tolerant airs. We classed ourselves as martyrs when, as sophomores, we had to spend long hours with those horrible books. As juniors we softened slightly as we enjoyed the privilege of cutting classes without being caught. But we were immediately brought back when, after a few escapades, we were found out. Then we thought her prying and unfair.

Finally, miracle of miracles, we became seniors. But alas, even then we blamed you for the nervous prostration that preceded senior exams and distribution of O. K.'s.

Dear Mother Central, won't you forgive us our hard feelings against you? Won't you remember only that we now thank you for everything? For the hard work, the patient teachers, the many books; they gave us our wisdom. For the tardy slips, the detentions, the social activities, the sports; they supply us with memories.

Now thank you, dear Mother Central, thank you and good-bye. Please try to forgive us and remember we'll always be grateful to you. May you always do as well for your foolish, giggling freshmen.

LOUISE ANTINOZZI.

Hail and Farewell

The student philosopher—the autocrat—seated at his garden table overlooking the sea, is having breakfast. It is June, the zenith of life, when the ethereal earth resumes its cloak of things materially beautiful. Trees, flowers and the boundless sea; a marching, sublimating, noble thought appears before his mind—the puzzle of life has begun!

Before the student philosopher lies a bowl of sugar. Taking a spoonful, he dissolves it in his coffee. Upon taking a second spoonful, his worldly philosophy causes a stark, deep thought to flash through his mind, a resounding realization of his position in the world!

He imagines the bowl of sugar as the World, where Man, in as countless numbers as the grains of sugar, survives. The table seems like the Universe, for the world is in the infinite Universe. The hand which guides the spoon of Fate is likened to that of the Almighty, a spoonful of men is taken, then a slight hesitation . . . like that which occurs between education and a career. Suddenly Fate turns, and into the cup of coffee falls Man! In the cup of Life struggles Man for a chance, an opportunity against unknown odds.

B-r-r-r,—the student philosopher shudders in an attempt to dismiss the thought concerning his insignificance, and drinking his coffee he determines to battle, to combat for those elements which constitute Success.

ANTHONY VITALE.

Thoughts: Discreet and Otherwise

Oh, yes, I was trying to remember that event—the 4A ballot, of course. It's as old as the hills, yet it gets as much attention as a circus in a hick town. Well, I recall hearing somebody say, "A fresh mind makes an old thing new."

To tell the truth, I didn't consider the ballot very seriously. After what happened (you read about it in the newspapers; stale news prohibited in this super book), I couldn't become interested in ballots but when I looked over the official results, official, mind you, I was stunned!

Imagine my amazement when I looked at perfect choices and then at names that I never knew existed. Before anyone gets ready to sue me for libel, let me explain that I'm sailing for Scotland soon . . .

Being an inexplicable female, the first item to catch my eye was the best looking. When I saw that it was a blonde I sort of felt insulted, but then remembering what a sweet and obliging blonde she is, I congratulated Marie later. Sincerely, she is pretty. Next my woman's eyes looked at the fashion plate. Joe wasn't a bad choice and Yetta's clothes are smart—only a girl notices that.

If noise made anybody popular, the devil sure favored Sarah, for she was the most popular. My hat off to you—you had me guessing with that mouth of yours.

Now, why they chose one of our most dramatic characters to be the most conceited is more than I know. Why, she is so "put-it-on" that after leaving her I was acting the same. And did I get scallions for compliments—don't ask. However, I will say she has brains.

Adelaide is just about the best all-around girl that I know. My hat off to you, for your sunny smile when you were defeated in a recent election by one vote (your own, at that). It takes a winner to do that.

Are you listening? Then you're saying that I'm not giving the boys a break. Here goes. Phil is the biggest bluffer and most charming rascal that I've met in Central. Don't misunderstand; I was thinking of an English period when I did my homework while he argued over writing spelling words seventy-five times each with Miss Boutillier.

Don't you think the Anthony's made a pretty good showing? You know them better than I do.

But the supreme surprise of a lifetime came when I had the luck to tell Martha that the class had voted her as the cleverest. Was she surprised—she hadn't known before—believe it or not.

There are many others on the ballot. However, I must fall back on that old, wornout excuse—lack of space makes it impossible for me to receive more tomatoes and roses.

EDITH HERSHOWITZ.

Central Sports at Climax

Central's track team basked in the champion's spotlight once again this season when they won the State Indoor Track Championship at the Newark Armory last March 2. The state meet climaxed a program of five track meets in which Central track men participated. It also marked the first time in seven years that Central totaled enough points to win the honor.

Six boys—Hollis Laysears, David Jakes, Homer Pope, Alvin Attles-Bey, Leroy Jackson, and Sam Coles,—were awarded athletic letters. But let us digress for a moment and view the dramatic scenes that were being enacted the night of the State Indoor Track Championships.

The last event on the program had been announced. The 220-yard finals were about to be run off. Central, up to the last event, had gained only 9 points. We needed five to win. In the southeast corner of the Armory were benched the Central track team. Two of the finalists in the 220 dash were Central men—Hollis Laysears and Edward Maxwell. Upon one of these boys or both hung Central's chances to gain victory.

However, another favorite for this event loomed up on the stage. Allison McGaw, of Kearny. McGaw had been an early favorite and by now appeared to be a threat.

Laysears and Maxwell stepped to the starting line each conscious of the task they were scheduled to perform. The whistle blew. "On your marks!" yelled the starter. "Bang!" barked the gun. And they were off, seven boys each striving to break out in front before that first treacherous turn was reached.

Laysears broke first with McGaw on his heels. Maxwell followed. Closer and closer came the turn and McGaw, the threat, attempted to pass Laysears, took the turn too fast and wide. Maxwell grasped the opportunity and slid into the second position, forcing McGaw out. Down around the stretch Laysears came galloping with Maxwell a good second. Up the last stretch of fifty yards both Central boys were fighting hard. The red wool suddenly appeared. And Laysears and Maxwell came through the finish line about ten feet apart!

The meet was over—the crowds began to swarm on the floor—more than half of Central's team encircled the victors—the announcer was bawling out the time of the event—Laysears was given a cup for winning the 220 dash—and still another cup was being handed to John Choko, assistant to Coach Bauer, emblematic of the championship.

Up in the dressing room the team was cheering. Mr. Bauer, choking with joy, raised his hand and exclaimed, "Fellows, I'm proud of you. In fact, I'm the happiest man here tonight."

Basketball also dominated Central's share of sports. The team, under the guidance of Coach Harry Sargeant, won seven of fifteen games played during the season. Varsity members included: Andrew Chisick, captain; George Targer, captain; Edward Wagner, Cecil Watkins, Irving Goldberg, Jack Fien, Masso Ryans, Robert Altounian, Fiore Bracciforte, Jervis Miller, Harvey Botnick, and Chris Green.

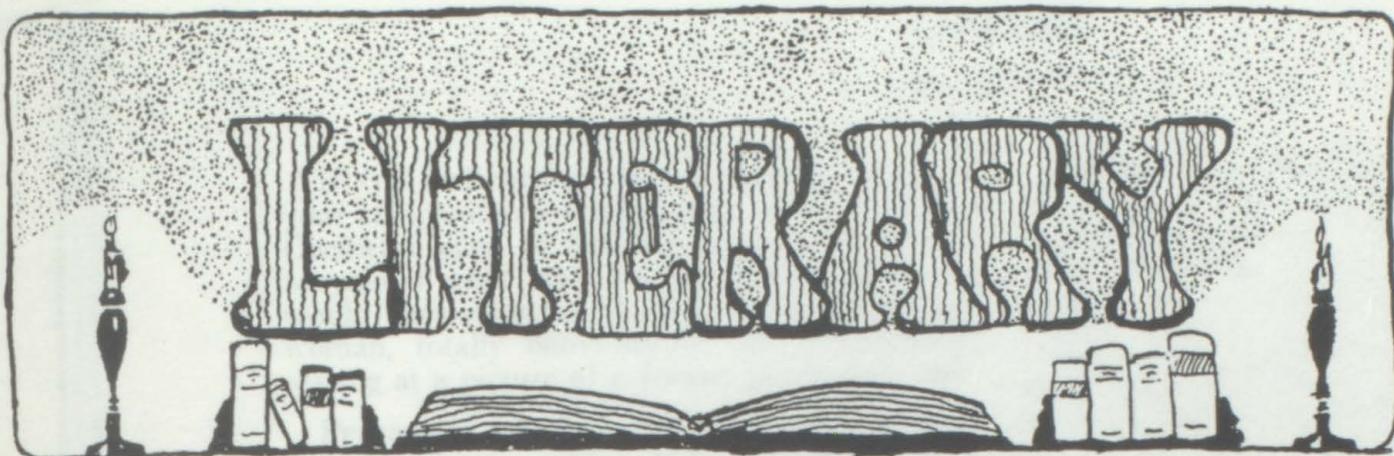

Several of these members were lost through graduation last January.

Autobiography

I stand.
 A lonely figure of noon-day sun,
 For I am thinking just of one.
 Awaiting just the time he ventures by,
 He will have none with whom to vie.
 I stand.

I wait.
 A slowly waning century, a day,
 Plods silently past my feet, away.
 Erect among the empty pages of my years.
 Untouched by any soiled hand until he hears.
 I wait.

I gaze
 Into the distant darkening of the sky.
 I down a sudden fierce desire to cry
 To him to hurry for my day is passing now.
 Far off to indigo horizon with furrowed brow
 I gaze.

I bow.
 The depth of night blots out my fallen pride
 For never in my house will he abide.
 And always in the knowing eyes of Fate,
 For him I stand, I gaze, I wait,
 I bow.

MIRIAM STERNBERGER.

Lynch Law

There was shouting and excitement
 At the doorway of the jail,
 Alone inside the sheriff stood
 A-watchin' his captive quail.

"There's a lynchin' mob outside," he said.
 "They aim to hev yore skin."
 He looked again at the shaking door.
 "My God, they're breakin' in!"

The crowd broke down the barrier
 And quickly flowed inside.
 Earthly bars might just as well
 Have stemmed the shifting tide.

The sheriff stood atop his desk
 Entreating loudly, "Boys!"
 But his shouting went unheeded
 In the tumult and the noise.

They took away his prisoner,
 A pore ol' worn-out black,

An' dragged him down the streets of town
 Right past his shabby shack.

They took him just outside the town
 And hanged him to a tree,
 Transgressing all the justice
 In the land that set him free.

They went away in silence
 And left him danglin' there,
 A kinda like a speerit
 A-dancin' on the air.

An' the wind it rose unholy,
 An' it whistled through the boughs,
 An' the night birds screamed epithets
 Down upon their guilty brows.

An' the screech owl came a-roostin',
 An' screamed at what it saw—
 That pore ol' codger hangin' there,
 A last grim jest at law.

Cavalcade

ADELAIDE COX

If you had not been intently talking to one of your companions while leisurely strolling to your Geometry class or had not been madly rushing to your French class on the fourth floor, you would have observed the tall, stately figure of a woman, totally oblivious of her surroundings, staring at a picture of a former graduating class.

Perhaps if you had occasion to pass through the first floor corridor daily, a thought might have crossed your mind that it was rather odd that a woman was staring at the pictures of the same class that you had yesterday witnessed a middleaged distinguished looking man gazing solemnly at.

If you lacked imagination, as most high school students do, you would not have even connected the two very remote facts, and would have most probably dismissed the matter from your mind.

But if you could have sensed the drama of the situation, you would have stopped to scrutinize more closely the beautiful features of the woman, from whom the passing of years had not detracted, but rather contributed to the tragic beauty of her face. Your gaze would have been inevitably drawn to her eyes.

Some of us are created with eyes that are the windows of our souls, and that show to the world our innermost secrets. Such were the eyes of this woman. Suddenly, no matter how young you were, on looking into this woman's eyes, eyes that told the story of shattered hopes, embittered dreams, you knew the meaning of intense suffering.

As she gazed at the picture before her, slowly she extended her arm and she moved a trifle closer, as if afraid some unseen hand would reach out and snatch the vision from her. Her slender fingers found their way to the face of the boy. If you had been close enough the face of the boy would have appealed to you, as it had to hundreds of others before you. Looking at it you couldn't be quite certain of the age of the boy to whom it belonged, but apparently he was in his nineteenth or twentieth year. His face bespoke the utter charm of a boy mad with the joy of youth, glad with the happiness known only to the schoolboy. As you looked at the picture the boy's keen, straightforward eyes seemed to give you an insight into his character, and you instinctively knew he was a boy capable of doing wonderful things.

Perhaps if you had even lingered to notice this much, you would have then hurried on and quite erased the incident from your overburdened mind. But later an event was to transpire that would bring it to your mind again.

While you were intently translating a French page, the woman was probably in the same spot in which you had taken leave of her. Her gaze riveted on that same smiling countenance, the events of her life seemed to pass before her.

She was transferred back twenty-odd years to a time when she was standing in that very same spot, by the side of the boy at whose picture she was now intently staring. How happy and carefree they had both been. She could recall the sound of Al's voice when he had said, "We'll come back years from now and chuckle over that mischievous smile on your face, Anne."

Next she remembered the breathless excitement of Graduation night. Edith, heartbroken because her corsage had not arrived and because it was much too late to order another, she had hastily pinned Al's unexpected gardenias on Edith's lovely shoulders, with a pang of regret, and herself worn the orchids a friend had sent, because the gardenias blended with Edith's gown. After the exercises they had hastily piled into waiting cars and left for the many homes at which they were due. While they were dancing, later in the evening, someone had called to her, "Anne, do you prefer orchids or is the giver more appreciated?"

Then she remembered the heated quarrel they had, Al accusing her of making a fool of him, by deliberately wearing another fellow's flowers. He ended by telling her he was through. She was so hurt at his lack of trust that she stubbornly refused to tell him the reason, and they parted.

She had heard of many foolish quarrels in the twenty years that had passed, but never had heard of one quite as silly as her own.

She refused to see him, and finally when she could endure it no longer, she put an ocean between them in her efforts to sever the bonds that held her to him.

She could recall now so vividly, the night she had stood on the deck of the steamer and had torn to tiny fragments the many pictures she had of him. And as she watched the fragments

Chlorotriazine lemons

and sheltered with dried palm fronds, or under strong demand, resulting in broad-based support and a general lack both within government and among the religious community for the proposal. This should have made one of the most controversial and long-term issues of the entire debate well within the control of the most powerful religious leaders in the country. But the religious leaders who were most influential in the campaign were the most conservative, and they had been most successful in convincing their supporters that the proposed legislation would be a violation of the First Amendment.

scatter into the rushing waters, a sense of loneliness overwhelmed her which she never succeeded in overcoming again in life.

She had gone a long way since that night, but time and work had not succeeded in erasing his memory from her heart. And now coming home twenty years later, she could not resist the impulse to visit the school where they had enjoyed so many happy hours together. A smile brightened her tragic face as she stood reminiscing.

Some time later, you might have been hurrying down to your locker or rushing to the library, and noticed a crowd of students grouped about a figure.

And if you investigated, as most likely you would, no matter which sex you belong to, you would have recognized the woman. A hush had fallen over those present, a hush that only the solemn breath of death can instill anywhere.

Finally, you might have heard a student say, "Why, look, that woman must have graduated from this school."

And as you lifted your eyes to the picture your fellow student pointed to, you saw the face of the dead woman as it had been twenty years ago, when her eyes had not known the meaning of tragedy. Instead you saw smiling eyes and a very mischievous grin.

If you possessed imagination you thought of the man you had seen solemnly staring at that picture only yesterday.

Resignation

My heart is a vacant bowl!
An empty, forlorn vase
Whose withered blooms, disprized,
Lie mould'ring at its base.

The careless winds have blown them
In carousing, laughing gusts
Round the eternal circle
Back to the parent dust.

Then should I grieve and sorrow,
The very gods offend,
That that which gave them to me
Should claim them in the end?

JAMES F. GAYNOR.

She Would Be His Ideal If:

She had Helen Gaedak's glorious locks,
Florence Knoller's dazzling teeth,
Miriam Sternberger's way of wearing clothes,
Rose Protis' figure,
Fannie Bruss' dancing feet,
Adelaide Cox's winning smile,
Louise Antinozzi's sparkling wit,
Edith Kean's gorgeous eyes,
Florence Tasoff's cupid lips,
Ann Pascone's adorable dimples.

He Would Be Her Ideal If:

He had Irving Colin's wavy hair,
Chet Silverstein's mischievous grin,
Joe Berger's sparkling teeth,
Joe Pfeffer's man-about-town swagger,
Howard Sweet's air of dignity,
Eddie Wagner's keen sense of humor,
Fred Berg's nonchalant air,
George Corona's boyish modesty,
John Ptasznick's collegiate air,
Anthony Vasta's ambition,
Henry Szygulski's pleasing personality.

What Would Happen If:

Anthony Vasta didn't ask for an ad;
Edith Kean was seen without Adelaide Cox;
Yvette Daigle lost her temper;
Sarah Bruss had a severe case of mumps and couldn't talk;
Ruth Kroser forgot to bite her nails during a
4A meeting;
Anne Kaufman really was stage-frightened;
Gabrielle Gold exerted herself;
Fred Berg acted dignified;
Anthony Vitale wasn't defending Adelaide
Cox's rights;
Nellie Elsie incited a riot;
Howard Sweet was not seen talking to some popular senior belle.
